

UK NEWS WEBSITE OF THE YEAR 2024

The Telegraph

Q | Your Say News Sport Business Money Opinion Ukraine Travel Health

Money > Property

'I spent £18k on a garden room and now I regret it'

Across the nation, hastily built 'lockdown studios' now sit idle and unloved

Alexandra Goss

Related Topics
DIY, Property and construction
Industry, Gardens, London
property

30 May 2025 2:00pm BST

🔖 442

📄 Gift this article free

✕ f 📧

“Many garden offices have become redundant because employees are increasingly expected to be back in the workplace several days a week, especially if they work for larger companies.

For that reason, demand from buyers and renters for a home office has plummeted. “Today’s property seekers are definitely more focused on prioritising a more urban location to minimise the length of their commute to work,” says Marco Previero, of R3Location.

Property buying services

Marco Previero

Director and Head of Research at R3Location

Aside from relocation, we specialise in helping people buy properties in Prime and Super Prime London, offering unparalleled expertise, in-depth research, and local market knowledge. We leverage extensive networks and off-market deals to secure exclusive homes at optimal value through thorough due diligence, and strategic negotiation to ensure seamless acquisitions. If you’re looking to buy, make sure to call us.

Source: The Telegraph
Date: 30 May 2025
Title: I spent £18k on a garden room and now I regret it